Apa style citation quick guide

Need some extra help with your APA citations? Using an APA citation tool is a quick way to get your credentials ready in APA format. However, it is still important that you have a solid understanding of how to quote sources in APA style. If you decide to use one of the APA quote guides, remember to carefully check each reference to ensure the accuracy of your quotes. Also, please note that some APA citation tools may still be in the process of updating to the latest guidelines found in the seventh edition of the APA Publication Manual.

- 1 Hero Images/Getty Images KnightCite is an APA citation maker from the Hekman Library at Calvin University that can be used to create a basic quote for a book in APA format. First, be sure to select APA from the Citation Styles menu on the left. Then fill in the required fields and hit send to get your APA quote.
- 2 Zotero is a useful open source browser add-on that can be utilized for a variety of research purposes, but it also makes a great APA citation machine. In addition to collecting and organizing your research, you can use the tool to create APA style citations. Zotero is also very helpful in helping to keep track of your research and sources, so you can use the tool to organize your references, quote your sources, and share what you have found.
- 3 APA Citation Wizards is a handy tool that offers a quick and easy way to create references for web pages, online books and online magazine articles. Make sure to double-check that the current edition of the publication manual is used for all citation types.
- 4 Landmarks Citation Machine is a tool allowing students to create references in a variety of formats, including APA. Start by selecting the APA format from the menu up at the top, and then click on the type of source you should quote (i.e. book, periodic, online article, etc.). Then simply fill in the required fields and hit submit.
- 5 CiteThis! is a Firefox Add-on that can be used to make quotes of online sources in APA, MLA and AMA format. According to some of the online reviews, the tool is not completely accurate, so always check your finished reference to ensure it is in the correct APA format.
- 6 Bibme is another citation tool that automatically generates and auto-fills quotes for your works quoted pages. The site also offers some useful advice on why it is so important to correctly quote other sources, including the fact that determining your sources will actually strengthen your own paper. The site also allows students to either search for sources or add them on their own. You can also save your bibliography and add it as you do more research. Finally, you can then easily download your references in APA format or even save them in MLA, Chicago or Turabian format. Using a quote maker can be for help when preparing your APA format sources, but they are no substitute for a solid understanding of the basics of APA style. These tools are often best used as ways to create references that you can then double-check before completing your assignment. Thank you for your feedback! What are your worries? If you take a psychology class, you can with great great faith be asked by your instructor to write an APA paper at some point. An APA paper is simply a written paper that follows apa format, the official writing format of the American Psychological Association. If you've never written an APA paper before, formatting rules and guidelines can seem daunting and difficult at first. You may be used to writing paper in a different format like MLA or Chicago style, so it may take some time to get the hang of writing in APA format. Although your instructor may have other specific formatting requirements for you to follow, here are some general guidelines for writing an APA paper. Use standard-sized paper (8.5 inches by 11 inches). Use a 1-inch margin on all sides. Write and double space your paper/Use a 12-point font like Times New Roman. Include a header. Student essays have a page number in the upper right corner of each page. The professional documents include the page title in the upper left corner of each page in addition to the page number in the upper right. The exact structure of your paper will vary slightly depending on the type of paper you have been asked to write. For example, a lab report can be structured a little differently than a case study or a critique document. A lab report will include additional sections detailing the method, results, and discussion associated with your experiment or study. No matter what type of APA paper you write, you should include four important sections: a title page, an abstract, the bulk of the paper, and a reference section. The title page should contain a running head, the title of the paper, your name, and your school affiliation. This page provides important details for your readers, so it's important to learn how to write a title that exactly yet briefly relates your paper theme. The abstract is a very brief summary of your paper. This section is placed directly after the title page. According to the rules of APA format, your abstract should be no more than 150 to 250 words. However, your instructor can issue specific requirements about the length and content of your abstract, so always check with the instructions and grades provided for your APA paper. The exact format of this section can vary depending upon the type of paper you writing. For example, if you write a lab report, the main part will include an introduction, a method section, a result section, and a discussion topic. Check with your instructor for more specific information about what should be included in the bulk of your APA paper. The reference section is where you include all and all references that were used to write your APA paper. Remember, if you quoted something in the main part of your paper, it must be included in the reference section. This should start on a new page, with the word References centered at the top of the page. While writing an APA paper can seem difficult or confusing, start by breaking it down into more manageable steps. When you research your topic, creating an outline and a working bibliography can help you structure your paper and keep track of all the references you use. Start by doing your research and then write your essay. Be sure to keep a careful record of all your references. Just write the abstract part of your paper after you're done writing your paper. Finally, put all your references together and create a title page. Once you have completed these steps, edit and proofread your paper. Review your finished APA paper to make sure all formatting is correct. If you need additional help with APA format, consider purchasing a copy of the official American Psychological Association Publication Manual. Thank you for your feedback! What are your worries? It is important to quote any sources that you quote or paraphrase when writing college essays. If you follow American Psychological Association (APA) guidelines, you should quote some information parenthetically in the text. APA style does not require you to quote press releases differently than other types of sources. Instead, follow the general rules for itext quotes set out in the Publication Manual of the American Psychological Association. List the last name of the author and the year of publication in parentheses, if you refer to a press release as a whole. For example: List the author's last name, the year of publication, and the page number in parentheses, if you refer to a specific part of a press release. For example: Place your quote at the end of a direct quote or paraphrase of the press release. For example: A press release stated that the company had never participated in any form of insider trading (Smith, 1990, p. 2), although evidence to the contrary continued to mount. Omit the author's name from your parenthetical citation, if you have already mentioned the author by name in the text. In this case, quote the year of publication directly after the author's name, and quote the page number right after the quote or paraphrased passage. For example: Smith (1990) stated that the company had never participated in any form of insider trading (p. 2), although evidence to the contrary continued to mount. Tip If a press release is authored by an organization, list the name of the organization instead of an author's last name. For example: (American Psychological Association, 1990, p. 2) Some press releases are either electronic sources or too short to be pagined. In these cases, APA guidelines suggest that you include a paragraph number, rather than a page number. The correct format to do this is as follows: (Smith, 1990, para. 5) 5
